

Meet Your Tutor

The parent builds the tutor. The child builds the relationship.

A note for the parent — read this first, then hand the page over.

Setup is done; this page belongs to your child. One rule before they start: the tutor never learns your child's real name. Help them pick a call-me name below — then get out of the way.

1 Pick Your Call-Me Name

The tutor needs something to call you — and it can be anything EXCEPT your real name. A nickname, a hero name, a code name: Jax, Captain, Bug, Ace, Speedy. You pick. That name is your secret handshake — it keeps your real name yours.

2 Create Your Tutor

You get to decide who your tutor IS. Its name. Its personality — funny, calm, adventurous, a little dramatic. What it looks like — a dragon, a robot, a coach, an explorer, an original character nobody has ever seen. Tell it:

"I get to create you! I want your name to be _____. Your personality is _____. And you look like _____."

3 Ask For Its Portrait

Want to see who you're learning with? Ask:

"Draw a friendly picture of yourself so I know who I'm talking to."

4 Say Hello — With Your Call-Me Name

Now introduce yourself, your way:

"You can call me _____. Now introduce yourself — your name, what you look like, how you're going to help me, and why everyone learns differently."

That's it. It's not mom's homework thing anymore — it's YOUR tutor. You built it.

Changed your mind next month? Rebuild it. New name, new look, same tutor that knows how you learn.
